TUNNEL CAVES IN AT NUUANU

Sluicing Work at the Big Dam Is Delayed for Several Days.

A cave-in, building a volcano-shaped mound in the waste tunnel leading from the big reservoir, has delayed the work at Nuuanu dam to such an extent that nothing further can be done until it is repaired. The tunnel was a temporary affair, built to let out the overflow of water, and was not reinforced in any way. The rains of last week loosened the dirt bridge overhead to such a degree that it sagged and finally caved in yesterday.

As a result, sluicing work has been discontinued, though it will be only a matter of three or four days until everything can be recommenced. Whitehouse estimated, during the rainfall, that there would be sufficient water in the dam to keep the work going forward for about two weeks.

The dirt in the tunnel has already been cleaned out, and preparations are being made to make the ceiling of reinforced concrete to prevent any further accidents. The tunnel is on the left side of the dam, looking down the valley, and was built merely as a temporary outlet for the waste water.

CHILD'S CLOTHING BURNS WITH SERIOUS RESULTS

While attempting to kindle a fire in a little cookstove Santa Claus had brought her, little Katie Birt, the daughter of Mrs. J. W. Birt, of King street, set fire to her clothing yesterday afternoon and is now in a bad condition as the result of the burns inflicted upon her body. No one was with the child at the time of the accident, the attention of her mother being first attracted by the screams of the little one as she ran towards her, her clothing flaming, fanned into further intensity by the struggles of the sufferer. The mother beat out the flames and sent at once for medical assistance. The family physician dressed the several large burns, mainly on the arms and chest of the child. He reports that the little one will recover.
